

The Museum of Fun

Recently, during our English lessons, we have been reading an electronic book called the Museum of Fun. This book is on a website on the internet. It is called active learn primary. (www.activelearnprimary.co.uk)

First there is a starting page where there is a curator saying something. Press the first hyperlink which is Let's Dance.

So let's dance. There you will see will find Morris dancing and street dancing. There are also no hyperlinks back to the starter page so you will have to press arrows back to the page. The T either means make something (that's with the title theme) or posters, or timelines. There is also a video on most of the pages too. Also paw buttons that are either facts, questions & answers or interesting things.

Hit the stage: You can show people your talents. I wouldn't rather do but you can. Probably every page has the curator on it telling you interesting things like she/he said that the museum of fun is her/his home.

Puppets: What? I think these puppets are different. Shadow, clay and water puppets. The T in the corner is about how to make your own sock puppet.

Funfair: There, there are white-knuckle rides and merry-go-rounds which are fun. There I a video also with people on a roller coaster which might have been the one in Blackpool.

Movies: Bollywood? You can watch movies there with lots of popcorn and sweets. Maybe you could make your own movie.

Clowns and acrobatics: A show! (In a circus) there will be weird and funny things. Like people flying onto other people. There will be a weird picture of people doing acrobatics and they are in colours (probably painted).

Festival fun: Well you could listen to music. Or see a Chinese dragon. It's quite interesting. With also more fun things to keep people entertained.

I think you should go to the museum because it is rather interesting and it is fun. Although the puppets are weird, I still think you should go there and maybe even be a tourist and show people around it and tell your friends about it

By Gabi